

Ashley's Reflection

When this class began I had an idea of how to lead a group but had no clue on how much improving that needed to be done. After reading certain books and completing certain assignments showed me I needed to improve on some of my leadership skills especially when it comes to delegating, communication and listening to my team member's ideas.

So when the assignment for practicum was given I thought of it as a good opportunity to work on these areas where I needed improvement. With saying that when it came to working on the project I let go of having to have all the control and delegated and listened to Jennifer and her ideas she wanted to do with the project. She had so many amazing ideas I would have missed if I had not listened to what she had to say.

We communicated throughout the project and related our ideas to one another and I believe this communication is what helped us work so wonderfully together. When preparing to present the project to the juniors we worked together to complete the task and doing this it helped us keep organized and focused on what needed to be done.

When we presented to the junior sonography class it was a true success and it seemed they enjoyed it thoroughly. They appreciated the outline of duties and normal anatomy reports and thought they would be great tool to have when school gets overwhelming with information. When it came to the outline of duties they were pleased to see the organization and break down of each event they were responsible for. This helped explain the tasks more thoroughly and answered many questions they had when they heard they were responsible for these events. They also asked how they would be able to access our games to help them study. They really thought they were beneficial to their learning and that felt fantastic for Jennifer and me.

Doing this project revealed that I enjoyed teaching and this might be something I pursue one day in the future. Jennifer and I worked delightfully together and truly worked as a team and doing this gave us only success. I hope you like our project as much as we do.
